vance, (Entered at the Postoffice at Alexandria, Virginia, as

From Richmond to Newport News. [Correspondence of the Alexandria Gazette.] HEWLETT's, Va., June 30,-At 4:10 o'clock p. m. the passenger train left the depot in Richmond for Newport ("Newport's") News. There were three cars, and yet there was not room for all the passengers. The most striking feature presented by the travellers on this road was the unusually large number of infants and children. The next was the great demand for fruits, candies, &c. In two minutes we were within the western entrance of Church Hill tunnel, and in less than five minutes we emerged from its eastern terminus, under the rugged sides of that famed semi-mountain, into a little town which seemed to derive its prosperity from the vast number of persons engaged in brick making. Beyond this the country is level, but little improved and sparsely settled, until you near Fort Lee. A little beyond this point you plunge into the far-famed White Oak Swamp. On a moderate eminence to the left, and not far from the station, is a red mound which, I presume, is the famed fort. From White Oak Swamp to Lanexa you pass through a country generally low and marshy, with occasionally an intervening space of rolling land. Elko, Roxbury and Providence Forge are the consecutive stations. Within this space you cross the Chickahominy on a long, low, substantial tressel work; beneath, all is now dry, save an insignificant stream which marks the channel of the river:

At Lanexa, the next station, there is a large body of water several hundred yards wide, and said to be quite deep, and one of the finest shad and herring fisheries in the State. This is a loop in the Chichahominy, which is embraced by lofty hills, to the north and east, in the side of the first, and through the latter,in a cut 90 feet deep, runs the road. There is one distinct strata of marl in this cut. Onward, we cross a considerathis point by Toano station to Williamsburg the country is quite rolling, with several bridges and cuts on the roadway, and the soil becomes chocholate and stiff. Occasionally, only, to this point, does the road pass old residences, but as you approach the ancient capital you see quite imposing buildings to the right of the road, and the outlines of a town of very respectable dimensions, almost buried in a forest of grand old trees, beneath the shades of some of which, no doubt, the Eurgesses of colonial Virginia have often reposed. The town seems to rest on an extended plain on the summit of a hill of no mean hight, through a cut, on the northern slope of which, passes the railroad, too deeply to afford a view of the town. You can see it best as you approach it from Richmond, and then at a depression in the hill, at the station, and again as you whirl beyond it towards Lee Hall, the next station, but one. At this place is an old two-story brick building apparently of colonial architecture. It is but a little way below Yorktown junction and marks very nearly the line between the rolling lands in the vicinity of Williamsburg and the extensive level lands beyond. After leaving Lee Hall, you pass through quite a level and wooded country, with but few settlements by Oriana and Morrison's to Newport News. I was informed that marl could be found within ten feet of the surface, in nearly all this district, and that most of the waters, both well and spring, are impregnated with it. You approach Newport News on a level plain; over to your right, you see several quite pretentions buildings, among which are the hotel, and the derrie of the artesian well. On the left are some plats of trucking ground, and nearer the wharf are several tenements occupied by the numerous laborers, while just before you are the spacious depot, wharves, and other works for loading and receiving freight. The plateau is level and spacious, devoid of trees, except here and there near

What is to be the future of this place, should sweet, cool water be procured in the well, no one can tell. That it will become a considerable ship-ping point, no one can doubt, but whether it will ever be a city, human ken can not now reasonably conjecture. The brain-work, as well as the name of C. W. Smith, General Manager, can be traced all along the route, and if capacity and energy, backed by the capital and liberality of President Huntington, can make a city, then there will soon be one, at Newport News.
